When I sell two packages of greeting cards for 10 euros each, it may seem like a decent profit. However, the reality is that a significant portion of that money is eaten up by various taxes and expenses, leaving me with much less than I initially anticipated.

Firstly, when the person purchasing the greeting cards gives me 10 euros, 30% of that amount is already deducted as tax. This means that I only receive 7 euros from the sale. Then, on top of that, I have to pay 21% VAT tax, which further reduces my earnings. Additionally, there is a 16.5% company tax that I am required to pay, further diminishing my profits.

If I decide to pay myself a wage from the remaining amount, another 30% income tax is deducted, leaving me with even less money in my pocket. And let's not forget about inflation, which eats away at the purchasing power of the money I do manage to keep.

All of these taxes and expenses add up, leaving me with a fraction of the original 10 euros that I thought I would be making from selling two packages of greeting cards. It can be frustrating and disheartening to see so much of my hard-earned money disappear before it even reaches my bank account.

It is important to consider these factors when pricing products and services, as they can have a significant impact on the profitability of a business. It is also crucial to advocate for fairer tax policies that do not disproportionately burden small businesses and entrepreneurs.

In conclusion, the current tax system can be overwhelming and discouraging for individuals trying to make a living through small businesses like selling greeting cards. It is essential to be aware of these challenges and to push for reforms that support and encourage entrepreneurship.

Governments go to war and millions of people die, yet after the war, nobody goes to jail. This harsh reality is something that many veterans like Papa have witnessed firsthand. As a veteran himself, Papa has seen the devastating effects of war on both soldiers and civilians.

Papa often talks about the rules of war that he was taught in the military. According to these rules, the military may only attack other military targets. However, in conflicts like the one in Sarajevo, snipers were targeting civilians, and innocent children were being killed by grenades. The brutality and senselessness of war were on full display, and the consequences were devastating.

It is easy to become desensitized to the horrors of war when we have 800 channels of entertainment on our TVs to distract us. We can easily tune out the news reports of bombings and casualties, choosing instead to focus on the latest reality show or sports game. But we must remember that behind the headlines and statistics are real people who are suffering and dying.

It is important to remember the human cost of war and to hold those responsible accountable for their actions. It is unacceptable that governments can send soldiers into battle, knowing that innocent civilians will be caught in the crossfire, and then walk away without facing any consequences.

As citizens, we must demand justice for the victims of war and ensure that those responsible are held accountable. We cannot allow governments to continue to wage wars without regard for the lives of innocent civilians. It is time to speak out against the atrocities of war and work towards a more peaceful and just world for all.

It is a common misconception that humans evolved from monkeys. In reality, humans and monkeys share a common ancestor, but we have evolved separately over millions of years. Despite this fact, it is interesting to note that in the last 6000 years, monkeys have not started to lose their hair or learn to speak like humans have.

So why is it that humans have evolved so drastically while monkeys have remained relatively unchanged? The answer lies in the different environments and pressures that each species has faced. Humans have adapted to survive in a wide range of environments, leading to changes in our physical appearance and cognitive abilities. Monkeys, on the other hand, have not faced the same level of environmental challenges and therefore have not needed to evolve in the same way.

Despite our evolutionary differences, humans have a deep connection to our primate ancestors. We share a common bond with monkeys and other primates, and many people feel a sense of kinship with these animals. This is why we often see monkeys in zoos, where they are cared for and protected by humans.

However, it is important to consider the ethical implications of keeping monkeys in captivity. While zoos can provide a safe environment for animals that may be endangered in the wild, they can also be stressful and unnatural for the animals. Monkeys are intelligent and social creatures that thrive in their natural habitats, and being confined to a cage can have negative effects on their physical and mental well-being.

As humans, it is our responsibility to treat animals with respect and compassion. While we may feel a connection to our primate ancestors, we must also recognize the importance of allowing animals to live freely in their natural environments. Instead of putting monkeys in cages in zoos, we should focus on conservation efforts to protect their habitats and ensure their survival for future generations.

In conclusion, while humans and monkeys may share a common ancestry, our evolutionary paths have diverged over time. It is important to respect and appreciate our primate ancestors, but also to consider the well-being of animals in captivity. By advocating for the protection of monkeys in the wild, we can honor our shared heritage and ensure a brighter future for all species.

Ever had stress about money or finances? If so, you are not alone. Many people experience anxiety and worry when it comes to managing their finances. However, there is a solution that can help alleviate this stress - digital money management.

In the video "Hoe wordt geld gemaakt?" from schooltv.nl, you can see how money is printed using paper and ink. While this traditional method has been used for centuries, it is not the most efficient or secure way to manage your finances. With digital money management tools, you can easily track your expenses, set budgets, and monitor your financial goals in real-time.

One of the key benefits of digital money management is the ability to access your financial information anytime, anywhere. With just a few clicks on your smartphone or computer, you can see exactly where your money is going and make adjustments as needed. This level of convenience and transparency can help reduce stress and anxiety about your finances.

Another advantage of digital money management is the ability to automate your finances. By setting up automatic bill payments, savings transfers, and budget alerts, you can ensure that your financial obligations are met on time and without hassle. This can help you avoid late fees, overdrafts, and other financial pitfalls that can cause stress.

In addition to these practical benefits, digital money management can also provide peace of mind when it comes to security. With advanced encryption and security measures, your financial information is protected from hackers and identity thieves. This added layer of protection can help you feel more confident and secure in your financial decisions.

So, if you have ever experienced stress about money or finances, consider making the switch to digital money management. By using modern tools and technology to track and manage your finances, you can take control of your financial future and never stress about money again. Start today and see the difference it can make in your life. Money isn't real, it's a control mechanism...

When was the last time you sat down to watch TV and found yourself questioning the information being presented to you? Chances are, it doesn't happen very often. That's because when you watch TV, your mind operates at only 20% of its capacity, essentially putting it to sleep. This is why many people don't question what they see on TV, even if it may not be entirely accurate.

On average, people spend about 3 hours a day watching TV. That's a significant amount of time to be in a state of mental dormancy. When your mind is operating at such a low level, you are more susceptible to accepting information without critically analyzing it. This can be dangerous, as it can lead to misinformation being spread and beliefs being formed based on faulty information.

Watching TV everyday is not healthy for you, both mentally and physically. It can lead to a sedentary lifestyle, which is linked to a host of health problems such as obesity, heart disease, and diabetes. Additionally, the content on TV can often be negative and fear-inducing, which can have a detrimental effect on your mental well-being.

It's important to be aware of the impact that TV has on your mind and to actively engage with the content you are consuming. Question what you see, fact-check information, and be critical of the messages being portrayed. By doing so, you can exercise your freedom of speech and think for yourself, rather than passively accepting what is being fed to you.

So next time you turn on the TV, remember to stay awake and alert. Don't let your mind go to sleep and accept everything at face value. Challenge what you see, think critically, and be an active participant in your own media consumption. Your mind will thank you for it.

Kids don't go crazy in puberty because of hormones. They go crazy because you put them in front of the toxic TV for hours every day since they were 4 years old. After 10 years of violence programming, which is 24/7 on TV, they model what they heard and saw. Like the owners of broadcasting stations don't know what influence 24/7 violence programming has on kids.

Do you doubt the influence of violence on TV on your kid? But have you ever bought anything you saw on TV? Many times, like a McDonald's hamburger. It impacts your behavior.

It's no secret that what we see on TV can have a significant impact on our behavior. From the products we buy to the way we interact with others, the media we consume plays a crucial role in shaping who we are. And when it comes to children, the effects of TV can be even more profound.

For years, researchers have been studying the effects of violence on TV on children's behavior. And the results are clear - exposure to violent programming can lead to aggressive behavior, desensitization to violence, and even an increased likelihood of engaging in criminal activities.

So why do we continue to expose our children to this harmful content? Is it because we don't believe that it has an impact on them? Or is it simply because it's convenient for us to plop them down in front of the TV for a few hours while we get things done?

The truth is, the impact of 24/7 violence on TV on kids' behavior is undeniable. Just like how advertising can influence our purchasing decisions, the violence we see on TV can shape how we interact with the world around us. And if we want to raise happy, healthy, and well-adjusted children, we need to be mindful of the content they consume.

So the next time you turn on the TV for your child, think about the messages they are receiving. Are they learning positive values and behaviors, or are they being exposed to harmful content that could have long-lasting effects on their development? It's up to us as parents to take control of what our children see and ensure that they are being exposed to content that will help them grow into responsible and compassionate individuals.

Have you heard of the charity Tate Pledge? If not, you're not alone. Despite the incredible work they do, this organization doesn't seem to be making headlines like it should. Why is that?

One possible reason is that Tate Pledge doesn't fit the typical news agenda. Instead of focusing on fear, crime, and negativity, this charity is all about spreading positivity and making a real difference in people's lives. They like to tell stories about the bad that one man, Tate, is doing for this world.

Tate Pledge is a charity that was started by a man named Tate who wanted to give back to his community in a big way. He started by helping out a few families in need, but his efforts quickly grew into something much larger. Now, Tate Pledge provides support and resources to countless individuals and families who are struggling.

So why isn't Tate Pledge getting more attention in the news? It could be that stories about positivity and kindness just don't sell as well as stories about crime and scandal. But that doesn't mean we should ignore the incredible work that Tate and his charity are doing.

It's time to change the narrative and shine a spotlight on the good that is happening in our communities. Let's celebrate the people like Tate who are making a real difference in the world. Let's support organizations like Tate Pledge that are dedicated to helping those in need.

So next time you see a headline about crime or scandal, remember that there are also stories of hope and kindness out there. Let's spread the word about Tate Pledge and the amazing work they are doing. Together, we can make a difference and show that good news is just as important as bad news.

Last week, I challenged myself to do 70 pushups, just 10 a day. It may not seem like a lot to some, but for me, it was a big accomplishment. And as a reward for my hard work, I treated myself to a delicious ice cream on Sunday.

This experience taught me a valuable lesson - that if you want something, you have to work for it. You can't just expect things to be handed to you on a silver platter. By setting a goal for myself and sticking to it, I was able to train my brain to earn things rather than feeling entitled to them.

In today's society, it's easy to fall into the trap of entitlement, laziness, and taking blessings for granted. We live in a world where instant gratification is the norm, and many people expect things to come easy to them without putting in the effort. But the truth is, nothing worth having comes easy.

By challenging myself to do 70 pushups last week, I was able to push past my own limitations and prove to myself that I am capable of achieving my goals. It wasn't easy, and there were days when I wanted to give up, but I persevered and ultimately succeeded.

So, I encourage you to set goals for yourself and work hard to achieve them. Whether it's doing 70 pushups in a week, running a marathon, or landing your dream job, remember that you have the power to make it happen. Train your brain to earn things, beat entitlement, laziness, and taking blessings for granted. You'll be amazed at what you can accomplish when you put your mind to it.

In conclusion, earning that ice cream on Sunday was more than just a treat - it was a reminder that hard work pays off and that I am capable of achieving great things. So, challenge yourself, push past your limits, and never take your blessings for granted. You'll be amazed at what you can achieve.

Stress is a natural part of life, but it's important to remember that not all stress is created equal. While it's easy to get caught up in the day-to-day worries and anxieties that come with being an adult, it's crucial to keep things in perspective. If you find yourself feeling overwhelmed by stress, it's important to take a step back and consider what truly matters in life.

One common source of stress for many people is the fear of losing their parents. It's natural to worry about the health and well-being of our loved ones, especially as they age. However, it's important to remember that death is a natural part of life, and stressing about it will not change the inevitable. Instead of dwelling on the fear of losing your parents, focus on cherishing the time you have with them and creating lasting memories.

Another common source of stress is the fear of getting old. For women, this often comes with the added pressure of losing their looks, while men may worry about their sexual performance. While these concerns are valid, it's important to remember that aging is a natural process that everyone goes through. Instead of stressing about the inevitable changes that come with age, focus on taking care of yourself and embracing the wisdom and experience that comes with getting older.

When it comes to stress, it's important to prioritize what truly matters in life. While bills and other small worries may seem overwhelming in the moment, it's crucial to remember that these are temporary problems that can be overcome with time and effort. Instead of letting these minor stressors consume you, focus on the bigger picture and the things that bring you joy and fulfillment.

In conclusion, stress is a natural part of life, but it's important to keep things in perspective. Instead of letting the fear of losing your parents or the worries of aging consume you, focus on cherishing the time you have with your loved ones and embracing the changes that come with getting older. Remember that bills and other small worries are temporary problems that can be overcome with time and effort. By prioritizing what truly matters in life and keeping things in perspective, you can reduce your stress and live a happier, more fulfilling life.

It may seem baffling to some why a woman with children and a steady job earning a substantial income of 5000 euros a month would choose to become an escort, engaging in intimate encounters with strangers for money. However, when we delve deeper into the reasons behind this decision, it becomes clearer that there are a multitude of factors at play.

One of the primary reasons that may drive a woman to enter the world of escorting despite having a well-paying job is the burden of high taxes. In many countries, individuals are taxed at a rate of 50% or more on their income, leaving them with only half of their hard-earned money to cover their expenses and support their families. This can be a significant financial strain, especially for single mothers who are responsible for the well-being of their children.

In such circumstances, the allure of quick and substantial cash from escorting can be tempting. By engaging in this line of work, women have the opportunity to supplement their income and provide a better quality of life for themselves and their families. The financial freedom that comes with earning extra money can alleviate the stress of living paycheck to paycheck and allow them to afford luxuries that were previously out of reach.

Additionally, the flexibility and autonomy that come with being an escort can also be appealing to women who are juggling the demands of motherhood and a full-time job. Escorting offers the freedom to set their own schedule, choose their clients, and work as much or as little as they desire. This level of control over their work life can be empowering and liberating, especially for women who may feel trapped in a traditional 9-5 job.

It is important to recognize that the decision to become an escort is a complex and personal one, influenced by a variety of factors including financial pressures, autonomy, and personal circumstances. Rather than passing judgment, it is crucial to understand the motivations behind this choice and offer support and empathy to those who find themselves in this situation.

In conclusion, while it may be difficult to comprehend why a woman with a steady job and a good income would choose to become an escort, the reality is that there are often underlying reasons such as high taxes, financial strain, and the desire for autonomy. By approaching this issue with understanding and compassion, we can better support and empower women who are navigating the challenges of balancing work, motherhood, and financial stability.

Millionaires and successful people often preach the importance of reading books and thinking positively as key factors in achieving wealth and success. They claim that by immersing oneself in literature and maintaining a positive mindset, one can unlock the secrets to financial abundance and prosperity. However, the reality is far more complex than these simplistic notions suggest.

While reading books and cultivating a positive attitude can certainly be beneficial in one's personal development and growth, they are not the sole determinants of wealth and success. In fact, many millionaires and successful individuals have achieved their status through a combination of hard work, strategic decision-making, and a bit of luck.

The idea that simply reading books and thinking positive thoughts will lead to riches is a misleading oversimplification of the complex factors that contribute to financial success. It is important to recognize that there are many other crucial elements at play, such as financial literacy, networking, and seizing opportunities when they arise.

Furthermore, the notion that reading books and thinking positively will automatically make you rich can be harmful and misleading to those who are struggling to make ends meet. It creates a false sense of hope and perpetuates the myth that success is easily attainable through simple actions.

It is crucial to approach the pursuit of wealth and success with a realistic and grounded mindset. While reading books and maintaining a positive attitude can certainly be helpful tools in one's journey towards success, they are not the be-all and end-all of achieving financial abundance.

In conclusion, it is important to be wary of the claims made by millionaires and successful individuals who suggest that reading books and thinking positively are the keys to wealth and success. While these practices can certainly be beneficial, they are not the sole determinants of financial prosperity. It is essential to approach the pursuit of success with a balanced and realistic perspective, taking into account the many complex factors that contribute to achieving one's goals.

In a shocking turn of events, a recent article in the newspaper claimed that a terrorist had attacked the Queen of the Netherlands while she was traveling in a double-decker bus. The article stated that the terrorist was in his car and had deliberately hit a few people in an attempt to harm the Queen. However, upon closer inspection, it becomes clear that this story is nothing more than a big lie.

Terrorist attacks are serious and devastating acts of violence that often involve the use of missiles, grenades, or other deadly weapons. It is highly unlikely that a terrorist would choose to carry out an attack using a car as their primary weapon. The idea that a car could be used as a tool for terrorism is not only misleading but also dangerous, as it spreads fear and misinformation among the public.

It is important to be vigilant and aware of the real threats posed by terrorism, but it is equally important to not fall victim to sensationalized and false reports. By spreading inaccurate information, we only serve to further the agenda of those who seek to instill fear and chaos in our society.

As responsible citizens, we must be critical of the information we consume and question the validity of sensational headlines. Let us not be swayed by fear-mongering tactics and instead focus on promoting peace, unity, and understanding in the face of adversity.

In conclusion, the claim that a terrorist attacked the Queen of the Netherlands with a car is simply not credible. Let us stand together against misinformation and strive for a more informed and compassionate society.

In today's world, we rely heavily on television news stations to keep us informed about what is happening in our communities and around the world. However, what happens when these stations spread false information to millions of viewers? This was the case recently when a suspect was reported to have thrown a chair at a judge in court, only for viewers to hear a chair hitting the wall instead.

The question that arises is: who owns these broadcasting stations and why do they lie to millions of people? The answer is simple - these stations are owned by large corporations who are more concerned with ratings and profits than with providing accurate and truthful information to the public. In their quest for higher ratings, these stations often resort to sensationalism and exaggeration to attract viewers, even if it means spreading lies and misinformation.

It is important for viewers to be aware of the motives behind these broadcasting stations and to question the information that is being presented to them. We must hold these stations accountable for their actions and demand that they uphold the principles of journalism by providing accurate and unbiased news coverage.

In a world where misinformation and fake news are rampant, it is more important than ever to be vigilant and discerning when consuming news from television stations. We must not allow ourselves to be swayed by sensationalism and lies, but instead seek out reliable sources of information that are committed to truth and integrity.

So the next time you hear a sensational story on television, take a moment to question its validity and consider the motives behind its broadcast. Let us hold these broadcasting stations accountable and demand that they uphold the highest standards of journalism for the sake of truth and transparency.

Politicians. They talk and talk, they have endless meetings, they make promises, but do they ever actually make your life better? The answer, more often than not, is no.

The truth is, politicians are often just puppets of the elites of the world. These elites are the ones who truly hold the power and control the decisions that are made. Politicians may give you the illusion of choice and freedom, but in reality, they are just following the orders of those who are truly in charge.

Think about it. How many times have you heard a politician make a promise during their campaign, only to see it go unfulfilled once they are in office? How many times have you seen politicians engage in endless debates and discussions, but never actually take action to improve the lives of the people they are supposed to represent?

The elites of the world are the ones who benefit from this system. They are the ones who profit from the decisions that are made, while the rest of us are left struggling to make ends meet. They are the ones who control the media, the economy, and the political landscape, ensuring that their interests are always put first.

So why do politicians continue to talk and have endless meetings, if they never actually make your life better? The answer is simple: it's all a facade. It's a way for the elites to maintain their power and control, while giving the illusion that we have a say in how our society is run.

But we don't have to accept this. We can demand more from our politicians. We can hold them accountable for their actions, and we can push for real change that benefits the people, not just the elites.

So the next time you hear a politician making promises or engaging in endless discussions, remember who is really pulling the strings. Don't be fooled by their empty words and false promises. Demand real change, demand accountability, and demand a government that truly works for the people.

I used to be a regular buyer of orange juice from the store. It was convenient, tasty, and seemed like a healthy choice. However, one day I happened to glance at the label on the bottle and was shocked to see that it contained 0.0% vitamins. How could this be? I thought orange juice was supposed to be packed with vitamin C and other essential nutrients.

After doing some research, I discovered that the process used to make store-bought orange juice shelf-stable for months actually strips it of most of its vitamins. The juice is pasteurized, filtered, and sometimes even dehydrated before being reconstituted with water and flavorings. This process destroys much of the natural goodness found in fresh oranges.

Determined to give my body the vitamins it needed, I decided to take matters into my own hands. I started buying fresh oranges and squeezing the juice out of them myself. Not only was this a more cost-effective option, but it also ensured that I was getting all the vitamins and nutrients that nature intended.

The difference in taste and quality was immediately noticeable. The fresh-squeezed orange juice was tangy, sweet, and bursting with flavor. I could feel the vitamin C coursing through my body, boosting my immune system and giving me a much-needed energy boost.

I urge you to consider making the switch from store-bought orange juice to fresh-squeezed. Not only will you be giving your body the vitamins it needs, but you'll also be supporting local farmers and reducing your carbon footprint. It's a win-win situation for both your health and the environment.

So next time you're craving a glass of orange juice, skip the store-bought variety and opt for the real deal. Buy some oranges, roll up your sleeves, and start squeezing. Your body will thank you for it.

Money is a powerful tool that governs our daily lives. We work hard to earn it, spend it on necessities and luxuries, and save it for the future. But have you ever stopped to think about where money comes from and how it is created?

Contrary to popular belief, money is not something that is backed by gold or any other physical asset. In fact, money is simply printed on paper and ink by the government. This means that money is essentially a piece of paper that holds no intrinsic value. So why do we place so much importance on it?

The answer lies in the concept of taxes. We are told that taxes are necessary for the government to provide essential services such as infrastructure and social welfare. However, the truth is that the money used for these services does not come from taxes. It comes from the people who work and contribute to society.

Think about it - the roads are already built, the schools are already functioning, and the hospitals are already operating. So where does all the tax money go? The reality is that taxes are simply a control mechanism used by the government to keep the population in check.

The government prints money out of thin air and then taxes the people to create the illusion of a functioning society. But in reality, the money that is used for social welfare and infrastructure comes from the hard work and contributions of the people themselves.

So the next time you receive a social welfare check or pay your taxes, remember that it is not the government that is providing for you. It is your own hard work and dedication that is keeping you afloat.

It is time to wake up and realize that the system is designed to keep you poor and forever struggling. Money and taxes are simply tools used to control the population and maintain the status quo.

So let's break free from this cycle of poverty and take control of our own destinies. Let's work together to create a society where everyone has the opportunity to thrive and succeed. Let's stop being fooled by the lies of the government and take back our power. It is time to rise up and demand a better future for ourselves and our children

Masturbating Keeps You Poor: The Hidden Cost of Self-Pleasure

Masturbating is a natural and healthy activity that many people engage in on a regular basis. It can provide stress relief, improve mood, and even help with sleep.

However, what many people don't realize is that masturbating can actually keep you poor.

When you masturbate every day, you may feel satisfied and fulfilled in the moment. You may have no need or desire to find a partner for physical intimacy. But what you may not realize is that by not seeking out a partner, you are missing out on the financial benefits that come with being in a relationship.

When you have a partner, you have the opportunity to combine two incomes and split living expenses. This means that you have much more money to spend on things like travel, entertainment, and savings. You also have the benefit of having someone to share the financial burden with, which can provide you with more stability and security.

In addition to the financial benefits, being in a relationship can also provide you with attention, support, and love that you may not get from solo activities like masturbating. Having a partner can improve your mental and emotional well-being, leading to a much better quality of life overall.

So, if you find yourself masturbating frequently and feeling content with your solo activities, consider the long-term implications of not seeking out a partner. While self-pleasure may provide temporary satisfaction, the financial and emotional benefits of being in a relationship far outweigh the momentary pleasure of masturbation.

In conclusion, while masturbating may be a convenient and enjoyable activity, it is important to consider the hidden costs that come with it. By seeking out a partner and building a relationship, you can improve your financial situation, receive more attention and support, and ultimately lead a much more fulfilling life. So, next time you reach for that solo activity, consider the long-term benefits of seeking out a partner instead.

Pornography is easily accessible and free online, with a plethora of categories catering to every possible desire. However, have you ever stopped to consider if consuming porn is healthy for you and what it teaches?

One concerning trend in the world of porn is the rise of categories depicting sexual encounters with stepfamily members. Whether it's step-sisters, step-mothers, or step-fathers, these scenarios normalize and even glorify incestuous relationships. This raises the question of what influence this content has on teenagers and young people who may be consuming it.

By portraying taboo relationships as acceptable and even desirable, porn teaches impressionable viewers that engaging in sexual activities with family members is not only normal but also exciting. This can have damaging effects on individuals' perceptions of healthy relationships and boundaries.

Furthermore, the fact that porn is readily available for free raises questions about who owns and profits from these companies. What is their agenda in promoting such content, and what impact does it have on society as a whole?

It is crucial to critically examine the messages and values that porn promotes and to consider the potential harm it can cause. Instead of passively consuming whatever content is available, we must actively question the ethics and implications of the media we consume.

In conclusion, it is essential to be mindful of the content we consume and the messages it sends. Pornography, especially when depicting taboo relationships, can have a detrimental impact on individuals' perceptions of healthy sexuality and relationships. Let's challenge the status quo and strive for media that promotes respect, consent, and healthy boundaries.

Criminals seem to always be on the news, their faces plastered across screens and newspapers, their crimes dissected and analyzed for the public to consume. But have you ever stopped to wonder why this is the case? Why are criminals constantly being made famous while entrepreneurs, who provide jobs, pay taxes, support charities, and serve as positive role models, are not given the same level of attention?

The answer lies in the agenda of the news owners. They know that sensationalizing crime sells. Young people, in particular, are drawn to stories of rebellion and defiance, and criminals often embody these qualities. By constantly showcasing criminals and their actions, the news owners are inadvertently promoting a culture of lawlessness and deviance.

But what about the entrepreneurs who are making a positive impact on society? Why aren't they on the news every day, being celebrated for their contributions to the economy and their communities? The truth is, stories of success and hard work may not be as exciting or attention-grabbing as tales of crime and scandal. However, it is important to recognize and highlight the positive role models in our society, especially for the benefit of our youth.

Entrepreneurs are the backbone of our economy. They create jobs, stimulate growth, and drive innovation. They are the ones who are actively working to make the world a better place, yet their efforts often go unnoticed. It is time for the news owners to shift their focus and start showcasing the stories of these unsung heroes.

So, next time you see a criminal being glorified in the media, ask yourself why entrepreneurs are not given the same level of attention. Let's demand more positive role models in the news and celebrate those who are truly making a difference in our society. It's time to shift the narrative and start promoting the values of hard work, success, and positivity. Let's make entrepreneurs famous for all the right reasons.

When it comes to owning vast amounts of land and real estate, there are a select few elite families who have amassed incredible wealth and power over the centuries. These families have expanded their estates through strategic acquisitions and shrewd investments, resulting in them owning some of the most valuable properties in the world. Not only do they own the most land, but they also rake in mega millions in rent each month, further solidifying their status as the most powerful landowners on the planet.

One such family is the Rothschild family, who are known for their vast real estate holdings across the globe. With properties in major cities like London, Paris, and New York, the Rothschilds have built an impressive empire that generates millions in rent each month. Their wealth and power have been passed down through generations, allowing them to maintain their status as one of the most influential families in the world.

Another powerful family is the Walton family, who are the owners of the retail giant Walmart. With their massive fortune, the Waltons have invested in real estate properties all over the world, including shopping centers, office buildings, and residential complexes. Their extensive real estate portfolio generates a staggering amount of rent each month, making them one of the wealthiest families in the world.

The Koch family is another notable example of a family that owns a significant amount of land and real estate. With investments in industries like oil, chemicals, and manufacturing, the Kochs have acquired vast tracts of land and valuable properties. Their real estate holdings generate substantial income each month, further solidifying their position as one of the most powerful families in the world.

These elite families have built their wealth and power over hundreds of years of history, expanding their estates through strategic acquisitions and savvy investments. Their vast land holdings and valuable real estate properties have made them some of the most influential and powerful families in the world. With their ability to generate mega millions in rent each month, these families have cemented their status as the most powerful landowners on the planet.

In today's society, it seems like everywhere we turn, we are bombarded with messages encouraging us to spend, spend, spend. From television commercials to social media ads, the media is constantly pushing us to buy the latest gadgets, clothes, and experiences. But have you ever stopped to wonder why this is the case?

The truth is, the media is focused on getting you to spend because it benefits them financially. Advertisers pay big bucks to have their products featured in the media, and the more they can convince you to buy, the more money they make. This is why you rarely see any content promoting savings, investing, or getting rich programmes – because those topics don't generate as much revenue for the media companies.

Instead, the media is designed to keep you broke, poor, and struggling. They want you to feel like you need to constantly buy more in order to be happy or successful. This creates a cycle of consumerism that is hard to break free from. The more you buy, the more you feel like you need to buy in order to keep up with the latest trends and stay relevant.

But it's important to remember that true wealth and financial security come from saving and investing, not from constantly spending money on things you don't need. By focusing on building your savings and investing wisely, you can set yourself up for a secure financial future and break free from the cycle of consumerism that the media promotes.

So next time you see an ad encouraging you to buy something, take a step back and ask yourself if you really need it. Instead of falling into the trap of mindless spending, focus on saving and investing in your future. Remember, the media may be designed to keep you broke, but you have the power to take control of your finances and build a secure financial future for yourself.

Fast food has become a staple in many people's diets due to its convenience and affordability. However, the reality is that fast food is incredibly unhealthy and can have serious consequences on our health.

One of the main reasons why fast food is unhealthy is because of the way it is processed and prepared. Fast food is often loaded with unhealthy fats, sugars, and salt to enhance flavor and prolong shelf life. These additives can have detrimental effects on our bodies, leading to obesity, heart disease, and other chronic health conditions.

Additionally, fast food is typically high in calories and low in nutrients. This means that even though you may feel full after eating a fast food meal, your body is not getting the essential vitamins and minerals it needs to function properly. This can lead to deficiencies and a weakened immune system.

Furthermore, fast food is often cooked at high temperatures, which can destroy the natural nutrients in the food. This means that even if fast food does contain some healthy ingredients like meat, vegetables, and bread, the processing and cooking methods can strip them of their nutritional value.

In conclusion, fast food is unhealthy because of the way it is processed, prepared, and cooked. It is high in unhealthy fats, sugars, and salt, low in nutrients, and can have serious consequences on our health. It is important to be mindful of what we are putting into our bodies and to prioritize whole, unprocessed foods for optimal health and well-being. Next time you are tempted to grab a quick meal at a fast food restaurant, think about the long-term effects it could have on your health and consider making a healthier choice instead.

Debt collection can be a stressful and overwhelming experience for many individuals. Oftentimes, people find themselves in financial hardship and are unable to pay their debts on time. In these situations, debt collectors may resort to aggressive tactics in order to recoup the money owed to them.

One common practice that debt collectors use is raising the amount of the original debt. For example, if you owe 100 euros to a creditor and are unable to pay, the debt collector may increase the amount to 1000 euros. This can seem unfair and unjust, especially if you are already struggling to make ends meet.

Many people question the legality of this practice and wonder how a debt collector can arbitrarily raise the amount of a debt. The truth is, debt collectors are allowed to add fees and interest to the original debt in accordance with the law. However, this does not make it any less frustrating for the debtor who is already struggling to pay off their debts.

Some may argue that this practice is corrupt and designed to put individuals in even more debt, ultimately enslaving them to their creditors. While it may seem like a predatory tactic, debt collectors are simply following the guidelines set forth by the law.

It is important for individuals to be aware of their rights when dealing with debt collectors. If you are unable to pay a debt, it is crucial to communicate with the creditor and try to come to a reasonable payment plan. Ignoring the debt will only lead to further financial consequences.

In conclusion, while the practice of raising a debt may seem unfair and unjust, it is important to understand that debt collectors are operating within the confines of the law. It is crucial for individuals to take control of their financial situation and work towards finding a solution that works for both parties. By staying informed and proactive, individuals can navigate the world of debt collection with confidence and resilience.

The Netherlands, known for its progressive and liberal policies, has been making headlines for a different reason in recent years. Over the past decade, there have been a staggering 1000 new laws added to the books, with an average of 100 new laws being introduced every year. While some may argue that these laws are necessary for the safety and well-being of society, others are questioning whether this influx of regulations is actually leading to a decrease in personal freedoms.

With each new law that is passed, there are inevitably more things that individuals are forbidden to do. Whether it's restrictions on smoking in public places, regulations on what can be posted on social media, or limitations on where and when you can protest, it seems that the list of things that are off-limits is only growing longer.

But doesn't this constant stream of new laws ultimately lead to less freedom for the average citizen? While it's true that some regulations are necessary to maintain order and protect the rights of individuals, there is a fine line between ensuring safety and infringing on personal liberties.

One of the main concerns with the rapid increase in laws is that it can lead to a culture of over-regulation, where individuals are constantly being monitored and restricted in their actions. This can create a sense of fear and distrust among the population, as people may feel like they are constantly being watched and controlled by the government.

Furthermore, the sheer volume of laws can make it difficult for individuals to keep track of what is and isn't allowed, leading to confusion and potential legal trouble. This can be especially problematic for marginalized communities who may already face discrimination and unequal treatment under the law.

It's important to remember that laws are meant to serve the people and protect their rights, not to restrict them unnecessarily. As citizens, we have a responsibility to hold our lawmakers accountable and ensure that the laws being passed are in the best interest of the public.

In conclusion, while it's important to have laws in place to maintain order and protect individuals, the constant influx of new regulations in the Netherlands raises concerns about the erosion of personal freedoms. It's crucial that we continue to advocate for a balance between security and liberty, and push for laws that uphold the rights and dignity of all individuals. Let's work towards a society where laws serve to empower and protect, rather than restrict and control.

These companies own vast portfolios of media properties, from film studios to television networks and news organizations, giving them significant influence over what content is created and distributed worldwide.

As Christians, we believe in the power of prayer and the blessings that come from God. It is through prayer that we can communicate with our Heavenly Father and seek His guidance, protection, and provision in our lives. When we acknowledge God's blessings in our prayers, we are expressing gratitude for all that He has done for us and recognizing His hand at work in our lives.

One powerful Christian prayer that acknowledges God's blessings is as follows:

"Dear Heavenly Father, I come before you with a heart full of gratitude for the blessings you have bestowed upon me. You have blessed me with love, joy, peace, and abundance in my life. I thank you for your provision, protection, and guidance each and every day.

I pray that you continue to bless me with wisdom, strength, and courage to face the challenges that come my way. Help me to trust in your plan for my life and to walk in faith, knowing that you are always with me.

I ask for your blessings upon my family, friends, and loved ones, that they may also experience your love and grace in their lives. May your light shine through me, so that others may see your goodness and be drawn closer to you.

Thank you, Lord, for your countless blessings and for the gift of salvation through your Son, Jesus Christ. I pray that I may always be mindful of your blessings and live a life that honors and glorifies you.

In Jesus' name, Amen."

In this prayer, we see the acknowledgment of God's blessings, the expression of gratitude, and the request for continued blessings in various aspects of life. The tone is one of humility, reverence, and trust in God's goodness and faithfulness.

As Christians, it is important to remember to always give thanks for the blessings we receive and to seek God's guidance and provision in all areas of our lives. By acknowledging God's blessings in our prayers, we are reminded of His love and grace towards us, and we are encouraged to live a life that reflects His goodness to others.

Let us continue to pray with faith and gratitude, knowing that God hears our prayers and blesses us abundantly. May we always be mindful of His blessings and live in a way that brings honor and glory to His name. Amen.

In the Islamic faith, prayer is a powerful tool that allows us to connect with Allah and seek his blessings and guidance. One of the most beautiful prayers that we can recite is one that acknowledges the blessings that Allah has bestowed upon us.

O Allah, I thank you for the countless blessings that you have bestowed upon me. You have blessed me with health, wealth, and a loving family. You have guided me on the right path and protected me from harm. Your blessings are endless and I am truly grateful for all that you have given me.

I ask you, O Allah, to continue to bless me and guide me in all that I do. Help me to be a better person, to be kind and compassionate towards others, and to always seek your guidance in all aspects of my life. Bless me with strength and patience to face the challenges that come my way, and grant me success in all my endeavors.

I know that you are the most merciful and compassionate, and that you always listen to the prayers of your servants. I trust in your wisdom and know that you will always do what is best for me. I am grateful for your blessings and I pray that you continue to shower me with your grace and mercy.

O Allah, I am truly blessed to have you in my life. Your love and guidance are my greatest treasures, and I am forever grateful for all that you have given me. I pray that you continue to bless me and guide me on the right path, and that I may always be worthy of your mercy and grace.

In your name, O Allah, I offer this prayer with a grateful heart and a humble spirit. May your blessings always be upon me, and may I always be grateful for all that you have given me. Ameen.

As a member of the Jewish faith, it is important to express gratitude and appreciation for the blessings that God has bestowed upon us. One way to do this is through prayer. In Judaism, there are many prayers that thank God for His blessings and ask for His continued guidance and protection.

One such prayer is the "Birkat HaGomel," which is recited by individuals who have experienced a life-threatening situation and have been saved from harm. This prayer is a way to acknowledge God's intervention in our lives and to express our gratitude for His protection.

The Birkat HaGomel prayer begins with the words "Baruch Atah Adonai Eloheinu Melech Haolam," which translates to "Blessed are You, Lord our God, King of the Universe." This opening phrase sets the tone for the prayer, emphasizing God's greatness and power.

The prayer then continues with a series of blessings, thanking God for His kindness and mercy. It acknowledges that God has blessed us with life and has saved us from harm, and asks for His continued protection in the future.

Key words in this prayer include "Baruch" (blessed), "Adonai" (Lord), "Eloheinu" (our God), and "Melech Haolam" (King of the Universe). These words emphasize God's sovereignty and our dependence on Him for all things.

The tone of the Birkat HaGomel prayer is one of humility and gratitude. It is a recognition of our own vulnerability and God's power to protect and save us. By reciting this prayer, we are acknowledging God's role in our lives and expressing our thanks for His blessings.

In conclusion, the Birkat HaGomel prayer is a powerful expression of gratitude and faith in God's protection. By reciting this prayer, we are affirming our belief in God's goodness and asking for His continued blessings in our lives. Let us always remember to give thanks for the many blessings that God has bestowed upon us, and to seek His guidance and protection in all that we do.

About the author

Jasmin Hajro grew up in Bosnia until the war started, the family moved a couple of times within the country when the fighting and shooting came to close.

Eventually Jasmin, his mother and sister were able to flee the country to the Netherlands. Father had to stay there and fight as a soldier in the war.

The family lived temporarily in a few asylum centers for refugees and finally got a house in the city Doetinchem.

Father got shot in the war, almost died, and was also able to leave the country.

The family was reunited for a short while, and soon Jasmin's parents divorced.

The kids went to school, father and mother worked. Father remarried.

Jasmin got a diploma from school, he was good in languages.

He had a difficult puberty, where used drugs and drank a lot of alcohol, he also broke the law a few times. After using too many drugs, he got into a coma and barely survived. After that, he completely left that life and those people behind him.

He worked at several jobs. He started in 2007 as a dishwasher at Landal greenparcs he worked his way up to cook and got lifetime employment.

After collapsing a few times, he also stopped drinking beer.

Unfortunately he started hallucinating at work,
soon he couldn't sleep, focus or work.

He lost his work...

He started an investment company in December 2012

he failed. In 2015 while he couldn't find a job, he got sales training from his sister and he received packages of greeting cards, and started selling them in his neighbourhood. After a while, he started designing his own unique greeting cards.

He was writing in journals for many years, and in 2017 he wrote and self-published his first book: Build your fortune.

He always kept on writing new books,

by now he has written more than 185 books

he also translates his Dutch books into English.

He has been diagnosed with his mental disability, he now has 2 medicines, one against hallucinating and the other to be able to sleep.

He has gotten an income from the government to pay for living expenses.

His company is called Hajro International B.V.

he sells his packages of greeting cards, door to door.

His company helps people with disabilities and with low incomes, by giving them money

It also donates to a few good charities.

Jasmin lives in Zelhem by himself and his 3 cats, Sjakie, Jinx and Jingle.

Jasmin is a nice and generous person. He visits his mother, his sister and her 2 kids every week. He gives away more than 100 of his ebooks at Smashwords for free.

His journey continues to become a better salesman, writer, entrepreneur and to help a lot of people with his books, and his teachings on YouTube.

Please be supportive, buy more of his books
